4.3 External traffic load, January 2002

Traffic load on the network is one potential way of measuring congestion and thus also of measuring demand.

The graph shows the average incoming and outgoing traffic loads for January 2002. For an indication of sustained peak usage, these figures should be multiplied by three. Given the recent upgrade of the GÉANT network, one would expect low load levels for the countries that are affected.

Graph 4.3 External traffic load